ABSTRACT

Based on data collected by the American Association of Junior Colleges (AAJC), this directory provides information on 635 junior colleges in the United States and its territories, Canada, and other selected countries for 1955-56. Following introductory material on the scope of the directory, tables provide statewide summaries of the following data for all junior colleges, and for public and private junior colleges: number of colleges, AAJC membership, student enrollments and status, and numbers of full- and part-time faculty. Next, the directory lists the colleges alphabetically by state, providing the following information for each: location; administrative head; AAJC membership; state recognition or accrediting agency; type of control or affiliation; co-educational or single-sex status; date founded; enrollments for 1955-56 broken down by freshman, sophomore, or unclassified status, adult enrollments, and full- or part-time status; and full- and part-time faculty members. The following sections provide a list of individual AAJC members; an alphabetical listing of junior colleges; a directory of national and regional junior college organizations; and a directory of junior college honorary societies and social organizations. Finally, an analysis of junior college growth reviews changes in the number of colleges and enrollments from 1900 to 1956, the size and location of colleges, faculty numbers, types of colleges and forms of control, and accreditation agencies. The Directory contains information about junior colleges in the United States, its territories, Canada and a few other nations. The list comprises both accredited and non-accredited institutions. In general, institutions have not been included when they have not been designated as junior colleges by state departments of education. Every reasonable effort has been made to secure accurate information about each college. In this undertaking heavy reliance has been placed on the accuracy of the reporting junior college.

Separately organized junior colleges, general colleges, or lower-divisions of four-year colleges and universities have been included only if they are active members of the American Association of Junior Colleges. Undergraduate centers and extension centers, as in Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, are included in the listings in view of the fact that they are essentially two-year colleges.

More extensive and detailed information about junior colleges may be secured in American Junior Colleges, fourth edition, edited by Jesse P. Bogue, and published by the American Council on Education, 1785 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington 6, D.C., 1956.

Definition of Terms

Administrative Head. Each institution's designation of its administrative head has been accepted. The official title has been indicated following the name. It is assumed that this person is the one to whom correspondence should be addressed. It is not implied that in all cases the designated administrative head holds final administrative responsibility for the college.

Accreditation. The American Association of Junior Colleges does not act as an accrediting agency. Member institutions are prohibited by constitutional provisions from indicating, implying, or publicizing accreditation by this Association. Types of accreditation or equivalent recognition or approval are indicated by symbols as follows:

State Department of Education; the Board of Education in the District of Columbia; the Junior College Accrediting Commission in Mississippi; the Provincial Department of Education in Canada.

D—Indicates accreditation by the above

D^1—Indicates approval to operate as a junior college

Control. The primary basis for classification is twofold: institutions publicly controlled and institutions privately controlled. The first group is divided into state, local or municipal, union district, county, and joint county junior colleges; the second into those under denominational control or affiliation, non-denominational and nonprofit institutions, and proprietary institutions. Year Organized. Each institution was asked to report the year it was organized as a junior college. In some cases the date of origin of an institution which later developed into a junior college may have been given.

Enrollment. Enrollment data are given for the year June 1, 1955, to May 31, 1956, unless otherwise stated. A "special student" is defined as a student who is not classified as either a freshman or sophomore because he is carrying less than a full-time load but who can be considered to be working toward a degree, diploma, or certificate. An "adult student" is defined as one who is above the compulsory school age and who would not be classified as a freshman, sophomore or special student.

Faculty. The number of faculty is given for the same year as the student enrollment. The full-time faculty equivalent total is the sum of the full-time faculty and the full-time equivalent of the part-time faculty.

Membership. Membership in the American Association of Junior Colleges is indicated by an "M" or a "P" depending upon whether the membership is full or provisional. Active membership is open to any college which has received complete accreditation or equivalent recognition of any of the types indicated under "accreditation" above. Provisional membership is open to newly organized institutions and to others which have not yet received such recognition.

Analysis of Junior College Growth

JESSE P. BOGUE

THE ANALYSIS of junior college growth is designed to give the reader a general view of what has taken place in this educational movement from its inception to the present time. The year 1900 is arbitrarily indicated as the starting point. There were a few institutions organized as two-year units of higher education before that time. There were various expressions of interest and thinking during the latter part of the 19th century by leaders in education with respect to the need for a reorganization of the American school system. In this thinking, what is now the junior college was identified in one way or another as a needed development. The junior college, organized as a distinct institution in its own right, did not come clearly into the picture. Status for these colleges has come about through the process of evolutionary development. It cannot be said that all junior colleges have achieved independent status in organization. It has been achieved by many of them, however, and it is the definite trend.

The growth of junior colleges in numbers of institutions and in enrollments of students since 1900 is one part of a revolutionary educational movement in the United States and in some other countries. Education at all levels from elementary through the graduate schools has seen this phenomenon take place. Not only have greater numbers of students enrolled and continued education because of the increasing population, but also there have been remarkably steady increases in the percentages of the population in education. During the time since World War II, there has been a great upsurge of college attendance for many reasons. One of these has been the GI Bill of Rights. Benefits made available by the federal government made possible college attendance by vast numbers of veterans who otherwise either would not or could not have considered a college education possible.

A second and continuing reason is the deeply felt conviction that the age in which we live demands far more education for the rank and file of the people. Problems of social and political understanding, adjustment and cooperation on a world-wide scale have been confronting the American people as never before. Whether or not we like or approve of it, the United States has been elevated to a position of world leadership and power. Mass communication brings to the attention of the people far-reaching issues of a national and international character. Upon these issues the people are required to pass judgment and render decisions at the polls and in support of the government, or in opposition to it. The industrial revolution is being rapidly followed by another in the invention and application of atomic power and the new technology known as automation. Manual labor is rapidly decreasing; highly skilled labor is taking its place. Inventions have dislocated the whole range of former categories of employment and brought about many new fields in production, processing, management and supervision, communications, distribution and consumption. This revolution in our social, political, and industrial life has been caused largely by education and is a cause for more education in a spiralling progression.

It has been stated so many times in recent years by so many authorities that the next ten to fifteen years will find our college enrollments doubled compared to enrollments in the early 1950's that this observation does not require emphasis. The potential enrollments are in being. Every token seems to point out the probability that this will happen. In fact, indications are that this so-called "tidal wave" of students is now at the very doors of our colleges and universities. The past history and performance of the junior and community colleges indicate that they will play an ever-increasing role in providing for this on-coming tide of students.

Table IV will show the reader at a glance how the junior college movement has developed in numbers of institutions, enrollments, and percentages since 1900. Records are lacking for some of the early years and that for 1900 is an estimate. The larger number of colleges reported for the 1957 Directory is the result of adding 22 county teachers colleges in Wisconsin, listing newly organized junior colleges, and adding a few colleges that had existed for a few years but which had not come to the attention of the American Association of Junior Colleges. The county teachers colleges in Wisconsin are two-year institutions and have been reported by the U.S. Office of Education under the heading of non-degree granting higher educational institutions. In view of the fact that the junior college movement includes many different types and kinds of two-year colleges, it seemed appropriate and reasonable as well as consistent with the reporting of the U.S. Office of Education to include them in the Directory. They are two-year collegiate institutions and the fact that they specialize in teacher education does not in any sense disqualify them for inclusion in the junior college movement.

TABLE V

Growth in Number of Junior Colleges
1900–1956

Year	Total	Public	Private	Percentage Public
1900–01	8	0	8	0

1954–55	596	336	260	56
1955–56	635	363	272	57

Table V shows the comparative growth in the number of colleges between those organized and supported by the public and those listed as private colleges. The degree and kind of public support varies considerably from state to state. Private colleges are those organized as independent institutions and those that are church-related. The division in the number of public and private colleges was in favor of the private institutions until 1947–48, at which time they were almost even. Since that year, the public colleges have increased in numbers more rapidly. While a few private colleges have been established during the past few years, and while others will be established in the future, it may be accepted as fact that public colleges will be founded more extensively in the several states and at a greater rate. Several state studies in higher education indicate that this is almost inevitable.

Table VI shows the comparative growth in numbers of students between the public and private institutions. These are comprehensive figures and include full-time, part-time, special, and adult students. They include those who are working for credit and those who are enrolled as non-credit students. The report is a head count of all persons who were in junior colleges during the entire year and at one time or another from June, 1955 to June, 1956. This period of time includes summer sessions in 1955. Colleges were asked to report a student as an enrollee only once during the course of the 12 months. The preponderance of adult students is found in public colleges as one might well expect since the public colleges are community institutions. Moreover, the percentage of students enrolled in residential private colleges on a full-time basis is in all probability greater than the percentage of full-time students in public colleges. A "special" student is one who is unclassified and does not indicate whether or not he is enrolled full-time or part-time. Classified students may or may not include those on full-time or part-time basis. A student, for instance, could be classified as a freshman for three or four years, depending on the number of credit hours he may be taking.

In Table VII it may be observed that students indicated as "others" include special and adult categories. A further breakdown was begun for the year 1947–48 in which these students were reported separately. Table VIII shows this breakdown by years from that date to the present. The total in the "others" category (specials and adults) for the year 1955–56 is less than for the previous year by nearly 35,000. This may be accounted for in part by the reports from California for adult students. There appears to be a trend in that state for more students to become classified. This does not mean that the total enrollments in California dropped during the year 1955–56. On the contrary, the totals exceeded the previous year by more than 60,000. In California freshman enrollments reported for 1955–56 exceeded 125,000 compared to 79,449 the previous year, and sophomores exceeded 57,000 compared to 32,427 for 1954–55. Table VIII gives further data and the percentage of change with respect to the special and adult students.

THE FACULTIES

It is rather surprising that the number of full-time faculty members decreased during the past year from 13,277 to 12,452, according to the reports of institutions. On the other hand, part-time teachers increased from 12,092 to 14,150.

1955–56	107,113	— 2.2	278,203	—10.3

Just how this came about or what factors were responsible for it is not known. The total full-time equivalent number of faculty members increased from 17,219, as reported in the 1956 Directory, to 18,394 for the 1957 issue.

Table IX indicates the distribution of enrollments by the size of the colleges. It may be observed that the larger colleges are public and that the state of California is responsible for the greatest number of these institutions.

TYPES OF COLLEGES

In respect to control, the public colleges represent 363 institutions compared to 272 private colleges. The co-educational colleges represent by far the greatest number, namely 511, compared to 76 for women and 48 for men. In the number of years included in the programs of instruction there are five that offer now one year only, 599 with two years, 10 with three years, and 21 with four years. Therefore, it may be said that the co-educational two-year college predominates.

Among the private and church-related colleges the breakdown is as follows:

Independent, non-profit	84
Baptist Colleges	28
Catholic Colleges	66
Lutheran Colleges	15
Methodist Colleges	30
Presbyterian Colleges	10
Proprietary Colleges	5
Others*	34
Total	272

* These represent about 20 denominational bodies and the YMCA.

ACCREDITATION

A great deal of interest has been shown in the past few years for securing regional accreditation. By reading the records by states with respect to this matter, it will be seen that there are great variations between them. In some states a great majority of the colleges are regionally accredited; in some others, where the colleges have been in existence for a number of years, very few are accredited. For a good example, one may contrast the record in Washington State for public colleges with those in Iowa. The records indicate that 218 public colleges out of a total of 363 are regionally accredited. Of the 272 private colleges, 109 are accredited. It is quite likely that a few colleges were accredited in the late fall of 1956 and after data for the 1957 Directory were set in type.

ASSOCIATION MEMBERSHIP

Slight gains were made in the membership of the Association during 1956. There are now 462 active institutional and seven provisional members, compared to 449 active and 6 provisional during 1955. One reason for this increased number of members was the change in the laws of California whereby public colleges are now permitted to pay dues from public funds.
